“ Charles and Dorothy Prizer became friends with my parents in Illinois when they were young couples. The friendship lasted a lifetime even though my parents moved back to India after a few years.

Uncle Chuck and Aunt Dottie remained in contact with and friends with over 100 couples internationally. This was in an era when communications were via the postal services and little else.

After retiring, they resumed travelling and seeing the world. This included a number of trips to India to meet my parents and our family and to see a cross-section of India. They saw a significant part of this country and the occasional inconvenience did not deter them at all.

I marvelled at the bonding between the couple and their closeness to each other.

When Aunty Dorothy passed away, it seemed as if a part of Uncle Chuck had died.

We remained in close contact with Uncle Chuck via email and the occasional meeting. He ensured that my daughter met with and got to know a member of the third generation of his family.

Uncle Chuck has not really gone from our lives. He lives on in the minds and hearts of each of us.

He left the world a better place than when he was introduced to it. He left an enduring legacy.

'Rage, rage against the dying of the light ' seems appropriate here. His daughters Sharon and Linda were there by his bedside at the end at the age of 101 years.

One can only feel deep and profound sorrow at the passing away of a giant of a man.
