“ Gabe was in “Natural Helpers” in Moorestown high school, which I taught. Gabe provided guitar lessons for Samuel and me, back in the days. I liked hearing him, from afar, for Starbucks coffee on Main Street. I will miss him.

“ Gabe was my first real friend. From first grade and on, we were inseparable. We stood up for each other, we fought for each other, we were there for each other through personal triumphs, heartbreak, and everything in between. We spent countless hours skateboarding, riding bikes, making music, starting bands, making short films, and committing any stunt we could think of. I can't walk down any street in our hometown and not have at least one memory of you. Everything we did back then shaped my life today. In our teenage years, we took on different interests, had different groups of friends, and our friendship became more of a brotherhood. We grew apart, but we still loved each other like family. As adults, we battled our demons, and God saw fit to make sure one of us was always strong enough to help the other. Today, I took comfort in knowing that my last words to you were that I loved you and would talk to you soon.
Rest in peace, my brother.

“ I have more memories of Gabe than there is space to post. Gabe came in to our lives at the sweet young age of 6 and immediately became best friends with my son. He said his “R”s as “W”s and I used to love it when he would call and say “Misses Himelwright, Can Awwon come out and play?”. There isn’t a family photo album or movie that doesn’t have Gabe in it. Once, when they were still very young, they were told not to play by the creek. Being boys, of course they did. Aaron fell in and couldn’t swim. Gabe saved him by pulling him out with a branch that had fallen from a tree. I am forever grateful for that. Gabe and Aaron were always creative, making movies and forming various bands throughout the years. In later years, Gabe and I would have deep conversations about life, while he got me to watch The Walking Dead on Sunday nights. Gabe was family to us and we are devastated by his passing. Our hearts are with the Casario’s. May God grant him peace and may He comfort Gabe’s family in His loving arms. Until we meet again, my friend.

“ Bette, Robert, Micole & Alana Allekotte fondly remember our ten years on Newbold Ave. Gabe was constantly skateboarding except when he was looking for ways to be helpful. We can’t imagine him without his signature smile. Deepest condolences to the Casario girls and families.

“ Gabe has always been like a brother to me. We’ve been through good times and bad. I’ve loved him through them all. My memories with Gabe will always be cherished. He will always be in my heart.
