“ My memories of Dad go back to my childhood, when I sat on his lap and watched early 1950s TV with him, watched him play badminton in the backyard with friends on summer nights, jitterbugged in the living room with him, and enjoyed hearing his laughter at get-togethers. He was a very handy man and enjoyed projects such as constructing the largest swing set in the neighborhood for us kids, and many other building projects from his workshop in the basement. He was a good provider for his family. We enjoyed many wonderful family vacation trips. Every Christmas there was a lavish array of gifts under the tree. We had a nice lifestyle, were well-clothed, well-fed, and he provided each of his four children with the means to attend college. He was definitely a golf-lover and spent many hours enjoying his time out on the links. He enjoyed sharing things that he liked with the rest of the family, such as a book that he read, or his favorite concert video of Andrea Bocelli (I never expected that he would be an opera fan!) I am grateful for all these things, and I will miss him.
